

There is a new search criterion in courses@brown (<https://cab.brown.edu>), under the Advanced Search section on the left hand side to find courses that are accessible to students who have been granted permission to study remotely. You do not need to log in to access this feature. Start by selecting a term, such as Fall 2021, and then checking off 'Find courses that are accessible to remote students' what gets returned when you click the Find courses' button are the courses that are accessible to students who have been approved to study remotely that term.

The screenshot displays the 'Course Search' interface. On the left, there are navigation tabs: 'FIND COURSES', 'COURSES IN MY CONCENTRATION', 'COURSES IN A CONCENTRATION', 'COURSES IN A MASTERS PROGRAM', 'CARTS', and 'MY PRIMARY CART'. Below these is an 'ADVANCED SEARCH' section with filters for 'Exclude Times', 'Any Department', 'Any Subject', 'Any Time', 'Any Credits', and 'Instructor'. The main 'Search Results' area shows a list of courses, including 'AMST 0192F Whose Land? Tracing History and Memory in the Native Northeast'. The course details for AMST 0192F are expanded on the right, showing the course description, registration notes (including 'Instructor override required'), registration restrictions (enrollment limited to students with a semester level of 01, 02, 03 or 04), class notes, and curricular programs (Accessible to Remote Students (REM), DIAP Courses: Race, Gender, Inequality (DIAP), and Writing - Designated Courses (WRIT)).

Course Search

Search Results

Found 78 courses

AMST 0192F Whose Land? Tracing History and Memory in the Native Northeast

Section S01, CRN 26163

Spring 2021

Maximum Enrollment: 17 / Seats Avail: 6

Last Updated: 6/10/2021, 1:01:14 PM

Registration Notes

▲ Instructor override required

Course Description

This course explores local histories of the Native Northeast to introduce relationships between land, indigeneity, and settler colonialism. Students will learn about the Native peoples of present-day New England through readings of origin stories, historical documents, material culture, documentaries, poetry, mapping projects, and academic texts. We will consider the ways history is produced and reiterated in historical writing, popular narratives, and the land itself. Students will gain proficiency in decolonizing historical research methods and learn strategies for interpreting primary and secondary source documents in multiple short writing assignments, with opportunities for revision throughout the semester.

Registration Restrictions

Enrollment limited to students with a semester level of 01, 02, 03 or 04.

Enrollment is limited to Undergraduate level students.

Class Notes

This course will be held online, with several optional in-person walking tours of Providence and surrounding areas taking place during class time throughout the semester. These sessions will be made accessible via livestream or recording to those studying remotely.

Curricular Programs

- Accessible to Remote Students (REM)
- DIAP Courses: Race, Gender, Inequality (DIAP)
- Writing - Designated Courses (WRIT)

Course Resources

The Critical Review for AMST 0192F

When you select one of those courses, you will see Accessible to Remote Students (REM) under Curricular Programs on the course detail page. If you wish to register for these courses please place them in your primary cart and please visit the registering for courses tutorial.